This bibliography is to serve as an introductory source for understanding problems of health planning in community development; to give exposure to alternative systems of health and medical care delivery, and as a basic introduction to inter-ethnic relationships. It is also hoped that there will be gained a basic understanding of cultural styles and definitions of health other than those found in the "main-stream" of the United States and an understanding of standard health and medical problems.

This subject is very complex and the relevant literature is vast so it should be understood that this bibliography is merely to serve as a resource for basic introduction to the issues outlined. Inevitably, there is considerable overlap between the subjects which are presented and items are listed only once for economy.

These references contain general introductory materials useful for comparative study, and comprehension of the diversity in life styles, culture, health practices and beliefs throughout the world.
